PRESS RELEASE

January 2016

The innovative new Kite dining table flies high at Maison et Objet.

The new Kite dining table is made up of sharp, bold squares cut out of a pentagonal framework – although asymmetrical, the perfectly proportioned shapes all flow in to each other, creating movement and interest. The design echoes the wings of a bird of prey, and the light, skeletal frame is reminiscent of a kite, that you fly. It has a modern, sculptural elegance, which belies the industrial nature of metal.

The Kite dining table in Anthracite

“Although the frame of the Kite table appears to be very light it has the strength of steel which reminds me of the incredible iron structures of the Victorian age, and of Isambard Kingdom Brunel himself, who is always an inspiration to me” Tom Faulkner.
